P R E F A C E .

WE present to the citizens of Cambridge, the twelfth number of the Cambridge Directory. We have again the gratification of stating the encouraging fact, that we have added to our list no less than four hundred names, making ten additional pages, showing that our city has been steadily on the increase in the number of its inhabitants. We have been at great expense, and have taken great pains to make a correct and reliable book, yet we are conscious that many imperfections will be found on its pages — imperfections which, in a work like this, where removals are so frequent, are unavoidable. With these few remarks, we submit our little annual, for better or for worse, to an enlightened and generous public.

NILBURN & MILBURN SC.

FORT WASHINGTON.

FORT WASHINGTON, of which the preceding page affords an accurate and spirited sketch,* is situated at the extreme south-westerly point of our city, where it commands the embouchure of Charles River into the Back Bay. The visitor will find it at that part of Cambridgeport, known as "Pine Grove," at no great distance from the lowest bridge on the river, that connecting the city with "Longwood."

This small, but still interesting, as it is now almost a solitary relic of the fortifications which marked the Siege of Boston, has been within the last two years reclaimed from the chances of that common obliteration, which was progressively wiping out these traces of the first great act of the Revolutionary drama, and placed under a protection which is presumptively perpetual, in the solemnly accepted undertaking of the municipality of Cambridge.

Would that it could be that the sole other remaining example, the Fort on Roxbury Heights, might be saved from the devastating march of improvement, by means of as fortunate a conjunction of circumstances, and be like this dedicated forever to the memory of a past, and the conservation of a future patriotism !

The student of American history, who turns to that storehouse of the most authentic and reliable facts connected with the war of the Revolution, Marshall's Life of Washington, will find in the plans accompanying the same, one which elucidates the Siege, and fixes all the points made memorable therein. No less than between forty and fifty works of fortification are there designated. Some of these are regular forts of considerable magnitude, constructed with care, and doubtless under the best engineering skill and means available at that infantile period of scientific warfare on this side of the Atlantic; others are mere accessory or isolated earth-works, thrown up probably without much skill or method, to meet some real or anticipated emergency of the time.

Commencing at the east, and omitting the works on the islands in the harbor, several of which were of Provincial construction and not of important moment in the then "Be-leaguering of Boston," we can follow on the sketch referred to, the delineation of the following works of fortification, which are susceptible of some degree of classification :—

1. Breed's Hill, (the site of "the Monument.")
2. Bunker's Hill.
3. Ploughed Hill, (now Mt. Benedict and Convent ruins.)
4. Winter Hill, with four out-works.
5. Prospect Hill, with seven out-works.
6. Cobble Hill, (now site of McLean Asylum.)
7. Lechmere's Point, (now East Cambridge.)
8. Old Cambridge, Butler's Hill, Cambridge Lines, Forts No. 1 and 2, and a Redoubt.
9. Two three Gun Batteries at mouth of Charles River, (one of these is Fort Washington.)
10. Brookline Fort, (Sewall's Farm,) a four Gun Battery and a Redoubt.
11. A three Gun Battery and a Redoubt near Muddy River.
12. Roxbury Fort and three out-works.
13. Roxbury Lines and Advanced Lines.
14. Dorchester Lines.
15. Two regular forts on Dorchester Heights, (now South Boston.)
16. Two three Gun Batteries, near the shore, Dorchester Point.

Taking the accurate, and indeed almost exhaustive History of the Siege of Boston, by Mr. Frothingham, as our guide for facts and dates, it may be stated that this memorable event began, so far as this order of material preparations is concerned, with the throwing up of earth-works about the 1st day of May, 1775, although the orderly books do not specify their precise locality.

"May 3d, Col. Doolittle with 200 privates and officers (sic) are engaged in this work, under Mr. Chadwick, as Engineer." On the next day, a party of 450 under Col. Frye, are assigned to the like service at some uncertain point, known certainly not to have been Prospect or Winter Hill.

During this month, a breast-work was thrown up on the Cambridge road, near the base of Prospect Hill. But it was only on the 13th June, that the continuous preparation for siege operations was initiated. Gen. Gage's intention of seizing upon Dorchester Heights having been ascertained by the Committee of Safety, they passed a formal Resolve to occupy and defend Bunker's Hill. This was commenced and carried forward to some extent on the night of the 16th, that preceding the great battle. The proceedings were discovered at early dawn.

Gen. Putnam went from the hill after the battle to Prospect Hill, where at ten o'clock of the next morning, we find him, in the words of an eye-witness, "dashing about among the workmen throwing up entrenchments, and often placing a rod with his own hand," — never having washed or changed his clothes since the battle. Both the eminences of this elevation were "strongly fortified and connected by a rampart and fosse."

Traces of these works, still palpable, have survived the ploughshare, and may be found a little east of the brick church in Somerville, and on the southern summit of Prospect Hill, while the connecting rampart and ditch is exceedingly well preserved through a pasture, a little west of the bifurcation of Medford and Church streets.

Winter Hill was also fortified during the night succeeding the battle, a principal work with numerous intrenchments having been thrown up by the New Hampshire troops.

At Roxbury, General Thomas was soon engaged in similar service, so that on the 24th June, heavy cannon were placed on the hill "above Roxbury Work-house." On the 12th of July, this is described by a cotemporary witness, as being "a fort upon the hill westward of the meeting-house; an intrenchment at Dudley House; a small breast-work across the main street; and another on the Dorchester road near the Burying Ground; one on each side of the road through the lands and meadows a little south of the George Tavern." An abattis of sharpened trees pointed towards Boston, a redoubt near Williams's Mill, with another at Brookline, and a breast-work at Dorchester, complete this writer's account of the southern defences.

In most of these preparations, the experienced skill of Col. Gridley, the military engineer of the siege—was put in requisition—an officer preëminently deserving the next statue in honor of the heroes of the Revolutionary war. His unfortunate son, and a warrior second to but one in those eventful days, Henry Knox, were of his pupils.

Space does not permit further inquiry into this interesting subject. Most of the works are among the things which were. Twenty years ago, the writer of this sketch had visited and traced out more than that number of these relics. A petty remnant still resists the march of improvement, only two of which probably capable of being reproduced could be found three years since, one of these, the subject of this notice, has been successfully restored. This is one of the "Three Gun Batteries," commanding the mouth of Charles River, at no great distance below the Magazine.

It was situated on land which belonged to the estates of Judges Dana and Trowbridge, which, in 1838, was divided into streets and suitable lots for building, by Mr. Wadsworth, the surveyor, and a lithographic plan printed, which, with the square stone posts inserted at each angle, will preserve the exact lines to all future time. An agreement enters into all the conveyances made of the same, known as the "Dana restrictions," under which an uniformity of street fronts is secured, and all annoying or offensive occupations are forever prohibited. Securing forever a neighborhood as yet sparsely settled, of peculiarly select and eligible tenements.

In this laying out, the intelligent proprietors themselves closely connected with some most actively and wisely engaged in the great struggle, reserved a public square, called Washington Square on the Plan, containing in its centre the Three Gun Battery before mentioned. Its history was probably known to them generally, but it was not, probably, until the publication of the Memoirs of Col. Joseph Reed, Military Secretary to Gen. Washington, that the immediate connection of this little lunette with the Commander-in-Chief became certain. A letter therein from him to Col. Reed, authorizes the belief that its site was selected and its construction decided by him in person. At the time when the work of improving the Square was commenced, the Fort was in remarkable preservation. No ploughshare had passed over it, and its well turfed rampart and ditch were in as complete shape as they probably were in five years after it was thrown up. The angles and sides of the embrasures only had to be trimmed up with sodding, nothing required to be imagined or invented.

The first step on the part of the promoters of the improvement, was to procure from all those who had become proprietors of any of these lands, and, of course, held a common interest in this reservation, a conveyance of their rights to three Trustees, self-appointed, but pledged to carry out the design; Dr. L. V. Bell, Edmund Trowbridge Hastings, and Joseph A. Holmes, Esquires. By a most fortunate coincidence, a title was cheerfully and readily obtained from each and every one who had become possessed of an interest, some thirty or forty in number, no estate being in such position from probate, insolvency, or other obstacles as to embarrass the object.

The entire square, a lot of 260 by 160 feet, equal to 41,600 square feet, or about an acre, and worth at the time, at least six cents per foot, or $2500 was obtained.

A communication was addressed to the War Department, requesting the appropriation of certain pieces of the largest sized ordnance, which were understood to be in depot at one of the islands, to replenish the empty embrasures, and a favorable reply was received almost by return of mail.

The Grand Junction Rail Road Corporation appropriated under its act of incorporation, a portion of marsh land at the southerly side of the square, for which the Trustees were awarded the sum of $770.89 in damages, which was fortunately secured among the few payments made in that unfortunate enterprise. This was invested, and by its accumulation had reached the amount of $889.19, when in August, 1858, it was paid over to the city towards the work.

A petition to the Legislature was presented, asking the aid of the Commonwealth in so patriotic an undertaking. This was referred to a Committee, which visited the site of the fort, accompanied by Gen. Cushing, whose important influence was at once extended in its behalf. The report of the Committee, whose inquiries were materially aided by the intelligent and zealous representatives of the city, was followed by the grant of two thousand dollars under circumstances of prompt and cheerful readiness, demonstrating that republics are not ungrateful, when a fair and undoubted case for action is made out.

The City of Cambridge, to whose control and care the Trustees proposed to make over the estate and the funds in their hands, as was forthwith done, liberally and in conformity to a high public sentiment, which could not have brooked a refusal of its meed, after individual and public generosity had accomplished so large a share of the work, assumed its completion and its care to all future time. An iron fence of a pattern of unsurpassed fitness and elegance was erected on a cut stone base, having its main entrance through a gateway of two large cut granite posts, each bearing on its external face a cannon carved in bas-relief. The fence itself has for its posts cast iron models of cannon resting on the base, and sustaining a railing filled up with alternate spears and battle-axes ; the whole has been much admired by persons of taste. The grounds, to which the city added a strip at the left side, at the cost of nine cents per foot, to secure a sufficient width for a passage, were graded, the rampart and ditch finished.

A tall flag-staff, with suitable appliances, rises from the terre plein, from which, upon appropriate holidays, the stars and stripes of a yet glorious Union, are displayed in full sight of four large cities. A well was provided at its foot to refresh the summer pilgrim to this interesting point of "the classic ground of the Revolution."

The amount expended by the City of Cambridge as her share in the work, was $3,665.86, which, added to that furnished in land and money from other sources, say $5,388.19 makes the entire outlay not far from $9,504.05. This matter of expense is thus particularly enlarged upon, in the hope that other communities, so fortunate as to possess the like relics of their country's dark days of trial, may be encouraged to a similar preservation of them before it is too late.

Some of those engaged in this successful enterprise, have had still further hopes and views as to its embellishment, and prior to the present session of Congress, a plan was nearly matured to ask of the National Legislature, what some will regard (in view of the scores of revolutionary monuments voted, but never appropriated for,) as a Quixotic demand, — the means of erecting a statue in the middle of the fort. Of course, the effigies of him "first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen," claims a nobler position than this humble spot. But it was felt that the stalwart forms of Putnam, or Knox, or even Gridley, yet unsculptured by a forgetful posterity, might not inappropriately mark the ground over which they had watched and striven in the cause of freedom!

In those vernal seasons of the year, when the air is calm and pleasant, it were an injury and a sullenness against Nature not to go out and see her riches, and partake in her rejoicing with heaven and earth.

Dost thou love life, then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of.

The sublime and the ridiculous are so often so nearly related, that it is difficult to class them separately. One step above the sublime makes the ridiculous, and one step above the ridiculous makes the sublime again.

And when he is out of sight, quickly also is he out of mind.

TO THE PUBLIC.

WE invite your especial attention to the advertisements published in this volume of the CAMBRIDGE DIRECTORY. Among them can be found nearly all the wants of house-keepers and of individuals engaged in nearly all the pursuits of life. "Bargains," we feel positive, can be had at any and all of the establishments which are thus brought to their notice. They are among the most liberal, and those are the concerns that secure the most trade. All liberal dealers advertise, which, as a consequence, brings their business before the people, and the result is at once manifest. It would be invidious in us to particularize any one of our advertisers, but we would ask the careful perusal of the reader to all of them.

IMPROVEMENTS IN PIANOS.

Boston, July 7th, 1860.

N. M. LOWE, Esq., 344 Washington Street,

DEAR SIR: I have examined your improved form of Plate for Piano Fortes. and take great pleasure in giving you my opinion of its merits.

It being of the utmost importance, that an instrument should continue in tune, under all unfavorable circumstances; anything that tends to this result, deserves the highest commendation.

Owing to the form usually adopted to the upper end of the Plate, where the strings are attached, that part of it which extends over the sounding board, has always been liable to warp and spring in tuning. The line of tension of the strings being raised by the fillet, over which they pass above the upper surface of the Plate, the immense strain they exert is brought in such a direction as to tend to depress the point which extends over the sounding board. This cross strain on the metal of the Plate, is usually resisted by a brace connecting the end of the part over the sounding board with the pin block opposite, and by a post connecting the underside of the Plate with the bottom of the Piano case.

In this mode of construction there is a continual cross strain exerted on the metal of the Plate, which must seriously affect the instrument. As the elasticity of the Plate would be sensibly affected by the change of temperature, all cross strains should be avoided as far as practicable.

I consider the principal advantage of your improved form of Plate, is obtained by lowering the point of support for the strings, so that the line of tension passes directly through the centre of the thickness of the Plate; thereby avoiding the difficulties which exist in all other Pianos. The line of tension passing through instead of above the surface of the Plate, causes no warping or depression of that part usually supported by the sounding post, and therefore obviates the necessity of having it. Dispensing with the post, also, allows the sounding board to be made entirely without perforations.

The brace between the head of the Plate and that part containing the wrest pins, being only retained for the rigidity it gives to the latter part, and not having an immense downward strain to sustain, is not so liable to be broken as in other instruments; they are often broken and replaced by wrought iron of greater strength. Another important feature of your Plate appears to be in the pannelling or letting in of the part which receives the wrest pins. This brings the strain lower, and though there is not the same necessity, owing to the stronger form of this part, it reduces the cross strain in the same manner as at the other end of the strings. On the whole, I consider the metal in your Plate to be far more scientifically and judiciously disposed to bear the immense force exerted by the strings, than any other I have seen.

When it is considered that, according to the best authorities, there is a strain of eight or ten tons acting on the strings of a square Piano Forte when in tune, it will be readily perceived that even a small deviation from the centre line of the thickness of the Plate must sensibly effect it.

Very respectfully yours,

THEODORE G. ELLIS, Civil Engineer, State Street, Boston.

It will be recollected that these Pianos were awarded the second premium (a silver medal,) at the late Exhibition in Faneuil Hall, Boston.
